

Va va vroom!

Petra and Edwin's converted car workshop may be big enough to drive through, but clever planning and inspired design ideas mean it still feels like a true family home

Home profile

THE OWNERS Petra Janssen and Edwin Vollebergh, who run graphic design agency Studio Boot, their sons, Jan, 18, and Piet, 16, plus Lou the Goldendoodle and Sikkie the cat.
THE PROPERTY A converted car workshop in 's-Hertogenbosch in Holland, built in 1928. On the ground floor there are two studios, a hall and a kitchen-diner. On the first floor is a mezzanine that runs around the building, with a living room, TV room, study, a space for Petra's collections of textiles and Jan and Piet's en-suite bedrooms. The master bedroom suite is in the attic.

Photography Jean-Marc Wullschlegel/Living Agency
Styling - Tina Hom
Words - Joanna Simmons

← STUDIO

This is a Volkswagen Kübelwagen, or 'bucket car', advertising the couple's graphic design agency, Studio Boot. It's normally parked across from the house's dining area.

DINING AREA

The six-metre-long dining table is a conference design from the Sixties, which the couple picked up for a song. It was just too big for the average home! GET THE LOOK The table was sourced from fabriek.nl. Try Retrouvius for similar. The Missy benches are by Piet Hein Eek. The copper pendants are by Tom Dixon, available at Heal's.